Drink and drug drivers a growing problem

THE growing problem of people driving under the influence of alcohol and illegal drugs, including cannabis, needs to be tackled and more resources directed to it.

It's a problem which has a major effect on the whole community and also causes anti social behaviour. GPs should also notify the DVLA of any patient receiving treatment for alcohol or drug misuse.

Albert Charles Bishop,
Plumstead.

● Dr Nayan Patel, Clinical Commissioner of NHS Greenwich CCG, said: "Alcohol and substance abuse are all too often a factor in serious and fatal traffic accidents.

As doctors, we have a legal duty to notify the DVLA if we have concerns that drug or alcohol misuse may impair a person's fitness to drive. In fact, health professionals have to tell the DVLA about a number of conditions that could affect a person's ability to drive safely. They can include epilepsy, stroke, neurological and mental health conditions, physical disabilities and visual impairments.

We would always try to help our patients tackle abuse problems, but if the patient continues to drive, we have no choice but to follow guidance from the DVLA and the General Medical Council (GMC). This means contacting the DVLA immediately and disclosing, in confidence, information on how a patient's fitness to drive is impaired. We would also advise the patient of our decision to alert the DVLA."

Still no shelter at Charlton bus stop

ON 18th August I wrote about the lack of bus shelters in Bugsby's Way. There is still a problem with the bus stop opposite Sainsbury's where the shelter was overlooked.

Two shelters have been installed - one outside Sainsbury's going towards the O2, the other outside Kiwk Fit which was never asked for.

In your reply the TfL spokesperson said TfL were aware of the situation regarding bus shelters in Bugsby's Way and orders were currently being processed to install shelters at these stops. I would be most grateful if you could help again as I and many others are sick and tired of getting wet waiting at this stop.

Charles E Mann, Woolwich

● A council spokesperson said: "Official bus stops have been agreed for bus routes 472 and 486 outside Sainsbury's on the northbound carriageway and outside Kiwk Fit on the Southbound carriageway of Bugsby's Way. TfL have said the temporary stop outside Halfords on the southbound carriageway is not an official bus stop.

TfL have agreed this was an unsuitable location for a bus stop and the Council and TfL is in the process of having the bus stop markings removed from the carriageway in the next two weeks."

cultural dances as part of their new year celebrations

Pupils dance to welcome year of the monkey

YOUNGSTERS wore silk dance costumes from China to celebrate the arrival of the new Year of the Monkey.

The children, pupils at Greenwich Chinese Community School, performed traditional dances at the festivities on January 31 to mark the start of the Chinese New Year. Other activities included traditional Chinese paper cutting, painting and calligraphy, and pupils also gave a performance of the martial art of kung fu. Special sweets and red envelopes containing coins, known as li shi or hong bao, were given out to bring good luck for the year to come. Headteacher Josephine Chan MBE said the celebrations had been a great success. "Everybody was very happy. The children loved the chance to perform and the parents enjoyed getting together to look forward to the new year," she told Greenwich Time. The school is based at Meridian Primary School in Greenwich where Mandarin and Cantonese are taught for all ages, and the school also runs arts and culture workshops. ● For more information, call 020 8858 2410 or visit www.gccsms.org.uk

Ten years of tennis

MICHAEL Downey, the chief executive of the Lawn Tennis Association, was the guest of honour when Shooters Hill Lawn Tennis Club celebrated its tenth anniversary last month.

He spoke about the Davis Cup, and how the association supports the growing participation in lawn tennis. Presentations were made to both adults and juniors who had been successful in club, county and AEGON teams last year.

"It was a great evening," said club secretary Caroline Ratcliffe. "Shooters Hill LTC has had a good year, with over 500 members, and welcomes everyone whatever their age or ability."

Bite the ballot and register to vote

WITH forthcoming elections for the London Mayor and the Greater London Authority, campaigners are urging people to register to vote. The annual National Voter Registration Drive (NVRD) took place last week (Feb 1-7) but there's still time to get involved and ensure that you are able to place your tick in the ballot box.

Voting is an opportunity to change the world and stand up for the issues you believe in. Through its Bite the Ballot campaign, NVRD is aiming to engage more young voters and help them fulfil their potential as change-makers. Last February NVRD coordinated a world record-breaking National Voter Registration Drive, registering over 440,000 people to vote. They are hoping to beat this in 2016, but in order to do so they need your help - and you can do just that by registering to vote online at www.gov.uk/register-to-vote

'Talent bank' launched for high-flyers

New support for student entrepreneurs

by Dick Townsend-Smith

A 'talent bank' is being launched by royal borough business leaders to give graduates a helping hand in starting their own businesses.

The South East London Chamber of Commerce will help university graduates who have studied in the borough by offering free membership and allowing them promote their skills by putting their profiles on the chamber website.

Business leaders will also work with them to develop their businesses, and link them with businesses that are already established.

Chamber president Bob Harris, said: "This is a new idea to involve the local universities - Greenwich, Trinity Laban and Ravensbourne - to encourage the talent coming out of those institutions to establish themselves and start new businesses in Greenwich. The chamber's most successful activity is to bring businesses together - and we help them to do business with each other.

"Also in 2016 we want to support the borough's 'Smart City' agenda with our own 'Smart Chamber'. The idea is to be a membership organisation and a lobby group, and to do our best to strengthen all our businesses in Greenwich."

The chamber has been going for 125 years, helping businesses to grow and works with local authorities on issues such as transport, the environment, skills and the economy.

"Any business is welcome to join the chamber. We are their voice in the borough, and we make sure that business issues are addressed," Mr Harris added.

The chamber also has an agreement to work with the Visit Greenwich tourism agency. "We want to work with them to diversify what is on offer in the borough," said Mr Harris. "We want to concentrate on tourism and leisure, as well as the digital economy, to encourage creative industries and activities that are linked to online work."

The chamber runs breakfast and lunch meetings throughout the year working closely with the council, which supports many of its activities.

Cllr Sizwe James, the council's cabinet member for business, employment and skills, said: "Creating new business and jobs is a major part of our strategy to tackle poverty and the chamber plays a key role in helping to create jobs and prosperity. This new talent bank will ensure we benefit from the skills and talents of students in the borough while its work with Visit Greenwich will help to attract people to increase tourism, and develop the local leisure industry."

11,000 sign up for One Card

THE number of residents signing up for the Greenwich One Card surpassed 11,000 last month showing just how popular the unique scheme has proved since it was launched last November.

The One Card membership scheme combines access to leisure and library services with discounts at well over 100 local businesses.

It is free, easy to sign up for and once membership is confirmed it will last forever without holders needing to renew.

The One Card is gradually replacing the old Greenwich Card, with thousands of residents switching over to this more comprehensive membership in the two months since its launch. However, of 11,000 new One Card holders, almost 6,000 are completely new leisure and library members – meaning more people than ever are getting the most out of the Royal Greenwich's superb facilities.

Cllr Denise Scott-McDonald, the council's cabinet member for culture, creative industries and community wellbeing said: "To have as many as 11,000 residents signing up for a Greenwich One Card in the two months since its launch is really positive news and illustrates the progress we have made in making services even more accessible for residents. It is also great to see so many local people signing up for a One Card as their first membership with us."

The Greenwich One Card membership makes using the royal borough's leisure and library facilities easier and more convenient and also gives holders a huge range of deals and discounts from local businesses. I encourage local people to visit the council's website and sign up today."

● Local people can get their One Card at any library or leisure centre or visit www.royalgreenwich.gov.uk/onecard for more details and to sign up.

Funding boost to tackle rogue landlords

Traders give thumbs up to high street upgrade

THE council has received £175,000 to boost its ongoing efforts to tackle rogue landlords operating in the royal borough.

The funding is part of a £5 million government pot shared among 46 local authorities with Royal Greenwich awarded the sixth highest amount of money. It will be used to take on irresponsible landlords that force tenants to live in squalid and dangerous properties, making their lives a misery.

The funding means the council can carry out more raids, increase property inspections, issue a greater number of statutory notices, survey more streets and demolish sheds and prohibited buildings. It will also help the council to root out more 'beds in sheds' – where buildings are often rented to vulnerable people and migrants by landlords who charge them extortionate rents to live in cramped conditions.

It's all part of the royal borough's ongoing work to protect the interests of residents in private accommodation. Last month it was successful in taking legal action against the Ordnance Arms in Woolwich, where officers in the council's private rented sector team raised concerns about poor safety and living standards in a youth hostel.

Cllr Jackie Smith the council's cabinet member for community safety and environment said: "I am delighted that the council has secured this £175,000 boost. We already have an excellent record on taking on rogue landlords and supporting residents affected by their actions."

"The vast majority of landlords act responsibly and within the law. However we will always act to protect residents by taking strong actions against the small number who act exploitatively and force their tenants to live in overcrowded and squalid accommodation."

This funding will help the council in further ensuring that private tenants are protected from any unscrupulous behaviour they might encounter when renting a home."

Royal borough at the wheel in 'Smart City' innovation

THE council's commitment to developing and applying Smart Cities technology has received a further boost with the announcement of two funding awards in recent weeks.

The royal borough is a partner in the new MOVE-UK project, led by engineering giants Bosch with Jaguar Landrover and others, and funded by a £5.5 million grant from the government's InnovateUK body. MOVE-UK aims to speed up the development of driverless cars for the mainstream market and will particularly focus on analysing the large amounts of data involved in developing such technology.

Cllr Sizwe James, the borough's cabinet member for business, employment and skills, said: "This information will prove invaluable in helping Smart Cities such as Royal Greenwich improve services for residents, strengthen the economy bring new investment, and find new solutions to issues such as congestion, road safety and emissions."

The council is also a partner in the brand new 'Atlas' initiative, led by Ordnance Survey, a project that will develop autonomous navigation for driverless cars by testing and analysing environmental and mapping data vital for the technology involved. Both initiatives are among a number of projects, announced by business secretary Sajid Javid last week (Feb 1), that will benefit from £20 million in government funding to help research into driverless car technology.

Driverless cars could be on the streets for summer driverless cars in the royal borough.

The announcement will see three British companies working together to create the driverless vehicles ahead of a carefully controlled public trial in Royal Greenwich this summer.

The companies, Westfield Sportscars, Heathrow Enterprises and Oxbotica, are developing pods capable of operating fully autonomously and safely on the streets of London.

The new automated pods look like small train carriages and will be based on existing vehicles that are currently in use at Heathrow Airport. They will be developed without the need for dedicated tracks.

The royal borough is the local authority partner in the £8 million GATEway (Greenwich Automated Transport Environment) project. Launched in February 2015, it is one of three projects chosen by the government to test automated vehicles in urban environments.

This summer's shuttle trial is the first of three designed to test the suitability of driverless car technology within the royal borough. Future trials will take place to test autonomous valet parking and automated shopping cart deliveries in the future.

Cllr Sizwe James, cabinet member for business, employment and skills said: "The announcement of the next stage of the GATEway project is great news - it is a project of international significance and we are playing a vital role in its continued development."

"It is a key part of the council's Smart City Strategy, which sets out a future vision for the borough to ensure 'smarter' delivery of services to residents."

"Our success in developing driverless car technology really places the royal borough at the forefront of the Smart City movement, allowing us to use technology to drive improvements in services and our local economy."

DRIVING FORCE: the royal borough is a leading light in the development of driverless car technology including the driverless pods, right, and the automated shopping cart

Wash and brush up for Queen's 90th birthday

ROYAL Greenwich will be wearing its title with pride this June when the Queen celebrates her 90th birthday.

And it is supporting the Clean for the Queen campaign, which is calling for volunteers to help clear up Britain in time for the festivities.

Individuals, schools, volunteer groups are all being urged to do their bit now and over the special clean-up weekend on March 4-6.

Cllr Jackie Smith, cabinet member for community safety & environment, said: "This is a great way to show our appreciation for Her Majesty the Queen and all her many years for service for this country.

"The council is planning to get involved over the weekend but in the meantime, do get in touch if you want to take part to help make our royal borough shine."

The campaign is also supported by the London Mayor, who is also offering grants of up to £1,500 for his annual Capital Clean-up scheme. Up to 100 clean-up kits are being donated for the March Clean for the Queen weekend.

Parliament praise for Archway Project

THE work of a pioneering project that combines practical skills with learning was recognised at a House of Commons reception last week.

Staff and supporters of the Archway Project in Thamesmead were invited to the Commons by Erith & Thamesmead MP Teresa Pearce who is a patron of the project. The mayor, Cllr Norman Adams was joined by Archway director John Milton and chairman Manny Blake for the 'celebrating success' event last Wednesday (January 20).

The Archway Project was established in 1982 and provides educational and recreational activities with the aim of minimising social exclusion, empowering young people and reducing crime rates. Vocational courses include home cooking skills, information and creative technology (ICT), and engineering, working with motorbikes and bicycles.

The project receives no local or government funding and the event was also a chance to thank financial supporters.

Director John Milton said: "This was a great way of raising our profile and thanking our supporters – and all in such a great venue. We screened a video to showcase the project's work and it was a chance for people to see us in action."

A high note for

by Laraine Clay

MORE children and young people will be able to develop their musical skills with help from a new charity set up to raise funds for tuition costs.

The Greenwich Music Trust was launched on January 28 with the aim of providing scholarships for young musicians whose families cannot afford the cost of one-to-one tuition.

The audience was given a taste of the musical talents of three young people - Shannon Mahoney, Jameel Baksh-Weston and Naara Neto – who performed at the event.

They were followed by Jane Hammond, a pupil at Thomas Tallis School in Kidbrooke, who played a Chopin etude for the finale.

Jane has won a scholarship to study at the Royal College of Music from September and has already been supported by the music trust which provided her with a reconditioned piano to enable her to practise at home.

Speaking at the launch event held at Blackheath Halls, Alan Davey, the controller of BBC Radio 3, described the way music had influenced his life and how it important it is to give young people the opportunity to experience, and learn about, music.

of music at Trinity Laban, said it was important to ensure that children and young people from a wide range of backgrounds had access to musical tuition.

Although he could not attend the launch, the trust's patron Jools Holland sent a message urging people to support the trust's aims.

"The trust is doing very important work in its endeavour to financially support musically talented children and young people so that they can benefit from one-to-one musical tuition and grow as musicians," said the TV presenter and former member of the band Squeeze who hails from the borough.

"I do hope you can support this work in whatever way you can because learning an instrument is a lifelong gift. It gives a child a chance to succeed, to believe in themselves and to express themselves creatively – whatever their background." The trust has already received donations from several individuals and companies, and it hopes to raise enough to be able to fund at least ten scholarships this year alone.

Carolyn Roberts, headteacher at Thomas Tallis School in Kidbrooke, is chairing the trust and said it was eager to support the work of the Royal Greenwich Music Hub.

Funded by Arts Council England, the hub provides a range of services including musical tuition and activities, and runs two Saturday Music Centres which have led to the development of three youth ensembles.

Thanks to its work, many young musicians have had the opportunity to perform in such high calibre venues as the Royal Festival Hall, the Albert Hall and Blackheath Halls.

The hub also supports music in the borough's schools and has helped the development of music groups and choirs in five local secondary schools.

Cllr Miranda Williams, cabinet member for children's services, said: "The Royal Greenwich Music Hub is already doing fantastic work and the launch of the Greenwich Music Trust will offer more young musicians the chance to shine.

"It is a wonderful skill to be able to play a musical instrument and the more our young people who have the opportunity to develop these skills, the more talented and confident they will become."

Diving in for Demelza

COWABUGA! These ninja turtles joined other superheroes for a plunge in the Charlton Lido to raise cash for the Demelza children's hospice in Eltham.

Around 80 swimmers took part in the sponsored swim on Sunday January 31, choosing distances from two to 40 lengths. In return they were given a Demelza swim cap and some well-deserved hot food and drink afterwards.

Poppy Brown, aged seven, swam one kilometre because her grandmother Rosie is a volunteer for the charity. Poppy said: "My nanny told me about the event. I had been practising really hard on Tuesdays and Saturdays and was really excited!"

Events co-ordinator Gemma Murray said: "It was great to see so many people support our swim and really get into the spirit of the occasion by dressing up in so many different costumes."

All's well that end

PUBLIC health experts made a housecall to residents on the Woolwich Dockyard estate for a check up on their pioneering programme which is improving the health of local people.

For three years, the estate has been running a series of projects that are starting to have a real impact on residents' health and well-being. Funded by the Big Lottery, the projects include a scheme supporting local families to eat healthily, a community garden, a family learning group and a community café.

Now the scheme – which is part of a programme called Well London – has won the attention of campaigners, academics and funding bodies who are keen to see the approach adopted more widely.

During a fact-finding visit earlier this month, the estate played host to social entrepreneur Lord Mawson, who chairs Well North, a similar programme running in the north of England.

Also taking part in the visit were representatives of the Royal Society of Public Health and Public Health Wales, as well as members of the team from University of East London that coordinates the Well London project across the capital.

The aim of the visit was to build stronger links between organisations across England and Wales that are putting local communities in the driving seat when it comes to improving people's health and wellbeing.

Lord Mawson heard first-hand from residents about the way the scheme has helped to improve their health and about the way in which members of the community now support one another.

Woolwich resident Lydia Pratt said: "The Well London project helps me know what's going on in the community and is a good way of getting to talk to neighbours and other people in the local area. Overall it's a good way of keeping in contact with the local community and that's really valuable – it's something that we can be proud of as residents."

Lord Mawson, who has made it his lifelong mission to improve the lives of ordinary people by helping them to become independent, said: "I'm interested in what you do to challenge communities. Today I've seen people developing land into gardens, parents making things and people getting active."

"The next stage is getting entrepreneurial. We have to move beyond grants," he said.

Cllr David Gardner, the royal borough's cabinet member for health, social care and public health, said: "I am grateful to Lord Mawson for visiting the Woolwich Dockyard estate to see for himself the great work going on in the royal borough as part of the Well London project."

"Well London provides a really important framework for local communities covering a range of different services and the fact that projects across the country are starting up using this model is great recognition of the work and success we have had."

THERE has never been a better time to go to school in Royal Greenwich.

Key Stage Two results in primary schools continue to improve year on year, putting the borough as third best among England's local authorities. And figures show that 94 per cent of the borough's primaries are now rated as 'good' or 'outstanding'.

Alongside improving standards in the classroom, substantial investment is taking place to improve the learning and teaching environment and to make sure there are enough school places as the local population continues to grow steadily.

The council's programme will provide more places in primary and secondary schools, as well as offering more places for two-year-olds in early years' classes.

Cllr Miranda Williams, the council's cabinet member for children's services, said: "Greenwich schools are achieving excellent results for students of all ages. The investment in new buildings will ensure that all our children can have the best possible education. With the local population increasing, we are acting now to ensure that there are sufficient school places to meet demand in the future."

One major landmark approved this month is the new building for St Mary Magdalene School at Greenwich Peninsula. Constructed as part of the major regeneration of the area, St Mary Magdalene will be the borough's first 'all through' school. When complete, it will provide early years, primary and secondary education, offering places for children aged three to 19.

The council's planning board gave the £41m scheme the go-ahead when it met last Tuesday. The school will be built on land between Millennium Way and John Harrison way on the Greenwich Peninsula. Facilities at the school will be available for community use including a sports hall and multi-use games area (MUGA) and sports pitches.

Council Leader Denise Hyland said "The go-ahead for this school building is a major milestone in the development of Greenwich Peninsula. As well as providing extra places for young people within a successful school, the school will be at the heart of this new and expanding community."

Welcome move for Invicta

At Invicta Primary School a full-scale rebuild of its main site in Blackheath is nearing completion.

All-new buildings will replace the old ones, some of which date back to Victorian times. The building work is due to be completed in April, with the outdoor work finished during the summer.

Eventually the old school will be demolished, and its site used as an outdoor playground, with multi-use play equipment. The new school will be able to take 420 children and 75 members of staff, both full and part-timers. This is an increase of 90 children and 26 staff.

The original school building consisted of two wings with a courtyard between. As demand for places went up, the school has been growing at the rate of one extra class every year. The new building will be two storeys high. On the ground floor will be an entrance lobby with a lift and staircase to the first floor, and staff offices, toilets, nursery playrooms and group space. The reception and infant classrooms will also be on the ground floor.

The first floor will have junior classrooms, a staff room, a library resource centre, toilets and office and storage space. There will also be a single-storey main hall, kitchen and dining area. Head teacher Marie Corbett said, "Everyone at Invicta is really excited about the prospect of getting a modern school for our children."

The school also moved into a second site in Deptford last September.

A special secondary school

MAJOR investment is being made to give more opportunities and facilities for children with a wide range of special needs.

Willow Dene has its main base in Swingate Lane, where there are 163 primary school-age pupils with a variety of complex learning needs. Under the investment programme the school is expanding onto a new site in Wickham Lane, which is due to be finished in early spring.

Rachel Harrison co-headteacher of Willow Dene School, said: "We are now full settled into our new buildings and fantastic facilities at Swingate Lane. To develop an additional site for secondary aged pupils is very exciting. This will ensure that we can deliver high quality education for our children as they get older, continue the partnership with our parents and realise aspirations that we have for our children to grow into young adults. We have an Stage 3 curriculum which we are looking to implementing over the coming year.

Another site for older children with educational needs will be Newhave Gardens, Eltham. This will be on the King's Park adult education college, refurbished to provide a secondary school post-16 unit for 55 children. It is due to be open in April.

Our borough's schools

... success story, and now a multi million pound project to provide more places and improve facilities. 4 TIME reports...

Five new classrooms and more

ANOTHER five classrooms are being added to St Margaret's Primary in St Margaret's Grove, Plumstead. There will also be a new staffroom, new cooking, library, learning resources and utility rooms, main offices and a medical room.

Headteacher Jeremy Lunnon said: "More than a year's worth of building has been going on around us, and we have been moving around the school in phases so another room can be adapted or newly built."

We are modernising buildings that date from 1856 to the 1970s. The staff are very positive and good-spirited about it because it requires flexibility from them, with building work going on just yards away."

Building work is progressing well, and will be finished this summer. At the moment St Margaret's has 280 children. Eventually there will be 420, with the first intake of reception children this September.

Transforming outcomes for more children

PLUMCROFT Primary School in Plumstead is expanding to meet the needs of a growing population.

Under a scheme approved last month by the council's area planning committee, the school's buildings are being expanded to cater for 420 children with a nursery and 14 classrooms. The facilities will be in a brand new building on the site of a former sheltered housing scheme in Vincent Road. The school will open in temporary buildings on the site in September and the new buildings are due to open the following autumn.

Headteacher Richard Slade said: "As a community school in Greenwich, we're proud to be expanding our school to ensure we can meet the needs of even more local children and their families. Over the next few months, we will be recruiting more teachers and support staff so that we're ready for when we open our Vincent Road Campus."

"The addition of more world-class facilities, funded by the Royal Borough of Greenwich, will allow us to transform outcomes for even more local children."

SCENE

GREENWICH Theatre is doing its bit to help reduce the gender gap in the world of theatre.

Its spring season focuses on productions celebrating and promoting the role of women on stage and behind the scenes.

The theatre's artistic and executive director, James Haddrell, explained a recent study showed men still outnumbered women in theatre by around two to one.

"Proactive casting, commissioning or employment initiatives are valuable but they are still not creating female arts leaders," he said.

"We are aiming to seek out the best female emerging theatre makers who are creating work themselves, leading and defining their practice."

The season started last month with Goodstock, a show about genes and breast cancer, and continues this week from February 8-11 with The Girl Who Fell in Love with the Moon.

This production by The Human Zoo Theatre Company is described as "a Tim Burton-esque patchwork of puppetry, poetry, movement and live music," and is produced by Florence O'Mahoney and Marissa Beatty.

Three Generations of Women follows at the beginning of March, a new play based on the personal stories of women from across the UK which are also being used in an online archive project.

Also written by two women, it will be performed by Broken Leg Theatre from March 1-5.

boys and girls playing alongside each other – with a minimum of two girls per team.

The event is aimed at pupils aged 10 and 11, and every primary school in the borough is invited to enter while the event attracts many schools from outside the borough. League games are played on Thursday and Friday evenings after school, using all three pitches at the Meridian Sports Ground in Charlton Park Lane.

The annual football fest is organised by Ben Waller, PE teacher at Invicta Primary School, Blackheath, and is supported by Charlton Triangle Homes, the housing association which manages over 1200 homes in the borough, and Charlton Athletic Football Club which supports the league by supplying referees.

Aside from the children benefiting from the healthy side of competitive sports they also benefit by interacting with children from other areas of the borough. It all helps to break down barriers and there have been many new friendships forged over the years, Ben explained.

Each year trophies and medals are awarded to the best players and teams with additional recognition for players demonstrating the Olympic values of courage, respect, excellence, determination, friendship, inspiration and equality.

“The sportsmanship that is shown by every player with the shaking of hands at the end of each game is a wonderful sight and is regularly praised by the parents who come along to cheer on their children and their school,” he said.

Ten-year-old Malachi Adebayo from Cherry Orchard Primary School said: “Everyone at our school has been looking forward to this year’s league. Now it has started we are all very happy and we all hope our team will do really well as we will try really hard. It’s brilliant fun.”

Nigel Pierce, assistant director at Charlton Triangle Homes, said: “Charlton Triangle Homes is committed to the health and wellbeing of all its tenants and sponsoring this primary school football league serves this ethos very well. The enthusiasm shown year on year is reflected in its success. The league shows community spirit, sportsmanship and commitment at its best. This is positive healthy engagement that the children love.”
